Workers Center Celebrates May Day

by Catherine Anderson

Workers from restaurants, garment fories, assembly shops and other be sees gathered at the Chinese Progressive Association's (CPA) International Worker's Day celebration last rocy. For members of the CPA's Workers' Center, this year's event marks rticolarly significant triumph: a bill ponsored by the CPA Workers' Center to upgrade unemployment benefits received a favorable review from the joint Ho se and Senate Committee of Commerce and Labor.

The CPA bill would increase low wage earner's un employment benefits from 50 percent of wages earned to 66 percent. Although the Employment Security Law allows low wage earners to collect more than 50 percent of prior wages, the formula the benefit is based on has not been changed since the 1940s.

The bill also challenges dependency tryments. If an unemployed worker earned less than his/her spouse, the worker cannot collect dependency benefits. A single mother who was receiving $64 a week in unemployment benefits was told her $25 dependency allowance benefit would be cut in half because her unemployment benefits were too low.

Low income workers, seasonal workers, and those affected by production lay-offs will benefit the most from the new bill. The CPA cites many incidents of workers who experienced seasonal lay-offs and were only able to collect under $100 a week, even though they had worked for the business for seveal years. In one case, a woman who had worked in the garment industry for 16 years received only $34 per week in unemployment benefits.

The bill, sponsored by 46 organizations, including unions, educational programs, community agencies, churches,

Daniel Lam Optimistic About State Rep. Race

Daniel Lam, the first Asian American to run for the Massachusetts state legisl ture predicts a successful campaign. "In only 24 days we have raised $19,000. We have $15,000 in the bank. Note of the other candidates are that far ..." Lam announced his candidacy as tate representative to serve the 6th Norfoll District early in April.

The former director of the state's Office of Refugees and Immigrants, Lam croits his highly organized campaign for him to get media exposure and re supporters. The campaign incodes co-chairs from both Canton and dolph, the two towns represented by 6th Norfolk district. Lam is running a dimocrat to take the seat Rep. Jack Good leaves vacant when he runs for overnor.

I Chin town, members of his camign will hold campaign fundraisers in May. On May 7, the Indochinese community will hold a dinner for Lam at the China Pearl Restaurant at 7 pm for $30 a plate. On May 29, the Chinese American community will hold another fundraiser at the China Pearl. Lam is a naturalized citizen from Cambodia whose ancestry is Chinese

In Lam's favor, also, is the number of candidates running from both Randolph and Canton. Two more democrats from each town have entered. "Usually voters choose the candidate from their town, but with more than one running, we'll have a chance to compete." On Sept. 18, voters will choose democratic and republican candidates in a primary election. The final election is Nov. 6.

Lam started his campaign early to head off a possible credibility problem, he said. Only five percent of 6th District-voters are Asian American, while the majority are white American. Another five percent are African American. "An Asian American running for office is something brand new in the Commonwealth," Lam said. "I'm also a newcomer, a naturalized citizen. Not too many immigrants run for political office." He is also a first time political candidate. Most politicians begin their careers by running for small positions in their towns, such as town selectman before they consider a state candidacy, yet his interests and experience as director of ORI fit the legislature more than town government, Lam said. "While director for six and half years at the ORI, I understand the legislative process very well. I testified for and against numerous bills, and drafted many.'

As the former director of ORI, Lam said, he will bring to the state legislature the ability to build coalitions and bring people together on difficult issues. "Being a state representative is like being a matchmaker. You need to listen to the needs of the community and communicate that to the legislature," he said.

For the last half year, Lam has been busy learning about the needs of citizens in Randolph and Canton. After talking with over 300 people in his district, Lam pinpointed three major concerns of importance to voters: education, the environment, and childcare. The town of Randolph, although solvent, may have to lay off teachers. The town dump on the border of Randolph and Canton has affected the quality of the town's drinking water, and the local McGuire Chemical site is earmarked for a superfund cleanup. Childcare is so expensive, Lam discovered, that many parents have to work more than one job to keep up with payments. And they are not happy with the quality of care.

Massachusetts, which has one of the higest rates of deaths among one-week old babies in the country, is also the home of Vietnamese immigrants who know little about this country's healthcare system. To address their needs, South Cove Community Health Center has begun a pre-natal education program for pregnant Vietnamese women living in the Boston area.

"Most Vietnamese women coming to Boston here are alone, without a sister or mother to help them," said Dauly Thai, a Vietnamese healthcare educator who teaches the pre-natal curriculum. The South Cove program is building a support network for Vietnamese women with a course that gives them practical information about what to expect in their pregnancy. Nutrition, infant care, and family planning are also part of the class design.

The South Cove Community Health Center's obstetrics and gynecological department realized the need for the course when they discovered that some Southeast Asian cultural traditions are not easily transferred to this country. For instance, in Vietnam, it is sometimes customary for women to go into labor unaccompanied by a partner. Paula Smith,a nurse-midwife at South Cove Community Health Center who coteaches the class with Thai, said that almost 95 percent of Vietnamese who go into labor have no one to go with them. Some Vietnamese men believe that a woman needs privacy during her pregnancy, and if he is in the room with her, he will receive bad luck. Also, in Vietnam, said Thai, women don't go in for check-ups each month during their pregnancy as they are encouraged to do here.

When a woman is unfamiliar with the the healthcare system,

Asian Focus at the Boston Public Library

With approximately 20,000 Asians currently residing in the Boston area and surrounding communities, many of whom are recent arrivals from Cambodia, Thailand, and Vietnam, the Boston Public Library has launched "Asian Focus," an initiative to help the state's newest immigrants adjust to their new environment and culture.

(Editor's note: The following description of the Newton Cantonese School was provided by the school's board president,

Every Saturday students travel from places as far away as Wayland, Peabody, and Rhode Island to attend the Newton Cantonese School located in Chestnut Hill, Ma. Here, they learn to speak the Cantonese dialect, read and write Chinese, and appreciate Chinese culture.

The Newton Cantonese School, a non-profit organization, was founded in 1978 by Mary Young in Newton. It began with one class of 10 students. Today there are 19 classes and two langauge tracks. The Traditional Chinese track emphasizes reading and writing, while the Conversational Cantonese track concentrates on speaking and listening. During three-hour weekly classes, students participate in various cultural activities, such as abacus, Chinese calligraphy, Chinese brush painting, Chinese songs, stories, games, and arts and crafts. Interested students can also take Chinese dance and martial arts.

For three and four year-olds, the school offers a pre-school program to provide exposure to Cantonese through age-appropriate activities. For parents, there are basic Cantonese classes, seminars on relevant topics, and trips for the entire family. In February, 20 families journeyed to New Hampshire for a weekend of fun and skiing. A trip to the Silver Bay Resort in Lake George, New York is scheduled for August.

This year's special event includes a school wide Chinese chess and checker tourname **, a Chinese history trivia cor est, and a Chinese New Year celebration with the American Chinese Cultural Society and the WahLum Kung Fu Academy. In the Spring, the student council held a volley-ball tournament in volving teachers, students, and Enrollment applications are now available. Pre-registration for returning students will be in April and early May. Open House for new students will be on May 19 from 9:30 am to 12:30 pm. For further information, call 244-6446 or 964-1833.

federal grants administered by the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners, the Library has initiated a number of programs to assist in the acculturation process.

These include a recent trilingual performance by the American Chinese Art Society of traditional Chinese music and dance that featured authentic costumes from different time periods in Chinese history. Narrators explained the significance of the costumes and music and provided historical background during the performance which was attended by more than 1,000 persons of all ages. "It was really encouraging to see three generations of families attending together and enjoying the performances," said Fran Grosso, "and we have noticed a substantial increase in the utilization of our Chinese collections since

In a future related program, the Central Library in Copley Square will present a special series of Chinese films on three consecutive Monday nights beginning May 7th, especially for Chinese, Vietnamese, and Cambodians living in the Boston area. The films are all in Chinese with English subtitles.

On May 9 the BPI, will n sent a Cambodian Folk Festival featuring the Angkor Dance Troupe of Lowell performing outdoors on the Dartmouth St. steps of the Research Library. An expressive art form, Cambodian folk dance features distinct movements and gestures. In contrast to the stricter and prescribed movements of classical dance traditionally performed in the court, folk dance movements are spontaneous and easily express emotions.

The Boston Public Library has also taken steps to increase its foreign language holdings and services in order to assist this rapidly expanding population. Armed with demographic research and their knowlege of both the city's neighborhoods and existing library resources, Fran Grosso and her staff targeted eight languages in which the Library needed to augment its collections: Spanish, French/Haitian, Vietnamese, Portugese, Chinese, Khmer/Hmong, Lao, and Thai. The BPL then purchased books, videotapes, audiotapes, and mixed media sets for both adults and children to help the new immigrants in their acculturation. Special emphasis was placed on materials that could be shared by parents and children, such as bilingual editions of folktales, regardless of English proficien-

United Way Awards Chinatown Volunteers

The United Way honored three Chinatown volunteers for their outstanding service to the community at special breakfast and awards ceremony in April. Recognized as an outstanding volunteer was Jane Foster who volunteers at the Quincy Community School three times a week, teaching English as a Second Language to youngsters and their families. She volunteered for 13 years.

Also honored were Mr. Sui Chi Lin, the director general of the coordination council for North American affairs, for his contribution to the Chinatown American Legion Post 328. Mr. Sui-Chi Lin has organized the annual Boys' State program which teaches youth about the U.S. system of government. Mrs. Su-Maan Lin was also honored for her contribution to the American Legion. Every Saturday she teaches a popular Mandarin class at the Chinese Merchants' Association on Hudson St. where the American Legion Post is located.

The United Way commended Mr. and Mrs. Lin who were nominated by the American Legion Post for significant volunteer service.

and legislators has yet to be heard before the Senate Ways and Means Committee. In the House, the bill's supporters are: Representatives Charles F. Flaherty, Sherwood Guernsey, Robert A Durand, David P. Magnani, Suzanne M. Bump, Daniel E. Bosley, Byron Rushing, Nelson Merced, and Eleanor Myerson. In the Senate, supporters are Senators Willima Q. MacLean, Jr., Nicholas J. Costello, John P. Burke, Peter C. Webber, and Robert D. Wetmore.

Although the bill's supporters are optimistic about its success in the Senate, Monica Halas, an attorney from Greater Boston Legal Services who has advised the CPA on the bill, said that the next action will be to make sure the Massachusetts unemployment fund is solvent.

Employers pay an unemployment tax based on the first $7,000 of wages, an out-of-date formula which has not changed to accomodate wage inflation. In the last year, unemployment has doubled, further depleting the fund.

The credit for the bill's success thus far goes to the efforts of the Chinese workers who attended rallies and demonstrations, said Halas in a brief speech during the celebration for International Workers' Day. Adele Stacey, business agent for the telephone workers' union Local 2222, also congratulated the Workers' Center for their success, and thanked them for showing support for the NYNEX strike last fall.

Stressing the importance of unity to the audience of about 40 women and men Chinese American workers, Stacey recounted the early days of the NYNEX strike when workers from all positions tized they would have to work together in order to keep medical insurance benefits. The NYNEX company had planned to deduct $10.27 each week from every worker's paycheck to pay for health insurance until the workers' strike forced them to continue paying for the insurance. "Our largest victory was that we maintained our dignity. Our strike was not violent, and we were united in our determination to fight for what is right," said Stacey.

For Asian workers, said Suzanne Lee, chairperson for the CPA, the Workers Center's fight for higher unemployment benefits was a way to unify workers from various fields. "The workers themselves chose this issue two years ago. They wanted to focus on something that would unite restaurant, hotel, and garment workers." Members of the Workers Center divided themselves into small training groups: those working the night shift came during the day, and daytime workers attended meetings in the evening. Beacon Hill lobbyists came to instruct them on the legislative process. "For the first time Asians were able to understand the power of voting. To see and be involved in the political process is real empowerment for Asian people."

Their involvement went beyond the unemployment bill as well. In addition to supporting the NYNEX strike last year, Asian workers attended support rallies in Jay, Maine when workers at the papermill struck for better working conditions. They also supported the United Farmworkers who came through Boston last year describing the effects of chemical spraying on migrant workers.

Taxes are another main concern with voters, reflecting the extremes of many communities in the state. While some voters are saying that a community can't expect services without a tax increase, others are saying that residents are taxed too highly as it is. Although the tax situation is complicated, people are not helped by the predominant myths of Massachusetts taxation, Lam said. One myth is that the budget crisis was caused by heavy state taxes on businesses and individuals. Yet in reality, a Massachusetts family pays a smaller percentage of its income than in 30 other states. In addition, Massachusetts residents pay a smaller share of state, local income tax than they did ten years ago.

Lam believes that the fiscal crisis is really a crisis in leadership, and "not making a decision adds to the tax burden. Who wants to borrow $1 billion, and then have to pay $500,000 million in interest? This is not what taxpayers want either. Most people want to see that $500,000 million used to alleviate human suffering."

As state representative, Lam's first priority will be to address the issues of his district's constituency, yet he will continue to support the needs of immigrants. "How can I forget my immigrant roots? That's me. I'm an Asian American, and I have a moral responsibility to Asian Americans." As a state legislator, Lam said, he can bring a better understanding of the foreign born. "I can't say I'm going to run a crusade, and change the legislature in two years, but the presence of one individual can help arouse an awareness of immigrants. I'll be there to say, 'don't forget me, don't forget my people."

giving birth alone can be a frightening experience. The prenatal classes taught by Dauly Thai and Paula Smith prepare women to be independent if they have to, but also encourage them to trust the healthcare system in Boston. "During the first month, sometimes, a woman may not be sure she is even pregnant," said Thai. "I'm here to answer questions they don't understand. They really need someone to talk to."

The South Cove program was one of four in the United States selected to receive a $25,000 grant from the Johnson &

Johnson Company. The grant funds health programs which target underserved populations, and was presented to South Cove at a special awards luncheon in Washington D.C. in March. Since 1980, the South Cove Community Health Center has served over 1,600 high risk Chinese immigrants in need of a pre-natal program. Johnson & Johnson recognized South Cove for designing a similar program for the Vietnamese community.

The women's health clinic at South Cove is well knownwomen come from as far away as Western Massachusetts and New Hampshire to get services there.

During the first week of class, women learn about labor and pregnancy, and are advised not to smoke, drink, or use herbs. "Some Vietnamese women like to use herbal treatments for nausea or fatigue, but really, there's no research on their effects, so we advise against it," explained Smith.

explained Smith.

Problems with pregnancy and childbirth are discussed the second week. Women learn about the use of forceps, and the procedure which is quickly replacing it-vacuum extraction. They also study what a caesarean section is, and the use of epidurals and pain medication. The third and fourth weeks are devoted to questions, post-partum blues, and the care of newborns. In addition, they are given advice about contraceptives, or in the case of Catholic women, natural family planning.

Another benefit from the class is a chance for Vietnamese women to meet each other and build friendships. "They can break out of the isolation of living at home, alone," said Smith, "and meet other women who share the same concerns."

In the future, Smith and Thai want to include more information for HIV positive women, and issues around substance abuse.

Unemployment Explained

This column is part of a beaklet on workers' rights com-kiled and translated by the Chinese Progressive Association Workers' Center with help from many volunteers and friends. This booklet is being published in pocket size with the support of the Executive Office of Communities and Development, Sampan will be publishing this column in serials for the benefit of community members with questions about their rights on the job.

This serial explains workers' rights to unemployment insurance benefits during either a temporary or permanent layoff. Unemployment is rising rapidly in the Chinese community and around the state. If you have further questions about this column or want to find out more about unemployment rights, please call 357-4499 or drop by the Workers Center at 27 Beach St.

Unemployment Insurance:

Unemployment insurance (UI) provides temporary benefits to workers who have become unemployed through no fault of their own and who are looking for work.

How do I apply for UI?

You must file a claim with the Department of Employment and Training (DET) You should apply during your first week of unemployment. UI benefits will begin after a one week waiting period if you are eligible.
What to bring when you apply

- *Your social security number *A green card, proof of citizenship or refugee status
- *Your English name, address, and telephone number
- *The name, adress, and telephone number of all employers for whom you have worked in the past 52 weeks
- *A check stub or record of your earnings if you have it
- *Proof of dependent children (any one of the following): birth certificate, green card, passport, school document, medical record, health insurance card or tax form

Your eligibility for benefits is based on: a)Earnings- you must have earned at least $1200 during the preceding year and at least 30 times the amount of your weekly unemployment benefit rate;

b) Cause of unemployment- you must have lost your job through no fault of your own;

c) Availability for work- you must be ready to take a fulltime job and be actively looking for

work. Weekly Benefit Rate:

Your benefit rate is half of your average weekly gross wages up to a maximum amount. An additional $25 per week is available for each dependent child if you provide the main support for the child. However, your total dependency benefits cannot exceed half of your unemployment

Availability for Work:

You must be available for suitable work. Suitable work is the type of work you are expected to look for and accept. It includes work in your occupation or other work which your training or skill level reasonably allows you to do. The wages of the new job must be at least equal to or close to your previous rate.

Short-term Layoffs:

You should always register at DET (Department of Employment and Training) if your company is closed for a full week or longer, unless it is closed for vacation purposes. The first week of a plant shutdown satisfies the waiting period. You are entitled to benefits in the following weeks.

Reduced Hours:

If your employer reduces your hours significantly because of a lack of work, you may collect UI. After the waiting period, you can receive the difference between your reduced pay and your DET benefit rate plus thirty dollars.

Attending Vocational Train-

If you cannot find a new job without retraining, you may be allowed to attend English as a Second Language classes or vocational training while collecting UI.

a) Since you will be unavailable for work, you must get a waiver of the "active search rule" from DET to continue to collect UI. b) You can qualify for up to 18 weeks of extended UI benefits. c) You may be approved for training if you have been unemployed for at least 15 weeks or if you are a dislocated

Plant Closing Benefits:

Formerly, Massachusetts workers who were unemployed due to plant closings without prior notice were eligible for a supplemental Re-employment Assistance Benefit (RAB) for 13 weeks. This has been discontinued due to the shortage of state funds. Some federal funds for retraining are available for large plant closings in industries affected by foreign trade (such as garment or auto industries.) If you are denied benefits, ap-

If you are denied benefits for any reason, you have a right to appeal at a hearing before a DET review examiner. You should appeal within ten days of your

Movie On Japanese Internment

The Japan Society of Boston, in cooperation with the Asian American Resource Workshop and the Japanese American Citizens League, will present a special film documentary, "A Family Gathering" on May 11 at the Bank of Boston Congress Lobby at 7 pm. (See Calendar listings).

On December 12, 1941, five days after the attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese, Masuo Yasui was arrested by the FBI as "potentially dangerous" enemy alien. His wife, Shidzuyo, and their seven children were separated as a result of Executive Order 9066, which led to the internment of over 11,000 persons of Japanese ancestry on the west coast. Of the Yasui children, three were interned, one served in the U.S. Military Intelligence, two went east, and one son, Min Yasui, challenged the constitutionality of the orders and went to jail for Third generation family member Lise Yasui was raised on the east coast, unaware of the traumas her father's family had experienced during the 40s. She knew of her west coast relatives from home movies and photos, but had little awareness of her ethnicity or the history of Japanese Americans in the United States.

"Family Gathering' documents a personal history to discover the events of that time and to understand its repercussions through three generations of one family. Narrated by the filmmaker, it is a personal ode to the bonds of family and a testament to the resilence and faith of this family in particular. "Family Gathering" is the recipient of numerous film awards, including the Golden Gate Film Award, and a 1988 Academy for Best Documentary, Short Sub-
